Briefing for photographers, agencies and colleagues with a camera

Noah Fischer · 05 February 2026 · WE-MC-GDL-0005

Our photographs are the first thing people see of Weyland – often before they read a word. They should feel like a good documentary: honest, calm and full of real detail. This brief applies to commissioned shoots, drone footage and pictures taken by colleagues on site.

1. Light

We prefer natural light. Shoot early or late in the day – golden hour for landscapes and offshore assets, soft overcast light for portraits. No HDR look, no heavy filters, no artificial sunsets added in post.

Good: Harrow Bay-style offshore image, sea level, golden hour, natural colours.

2. People

Show the people who build and run our assets, with their names and roles in the caption. Everyone on a site wears the PPE required for that location – helmet, safety glasses, gloves, hi-vis, harness at height, life jacket on deck. A picture with missing PPE is not used, however beautiful it is. Get written consent (form HR-F-012) from every recognisable person.

Good: environmental portrait, technician at the tower door, correct PPE.

3. Places and context

Show assets in their landscape and with their neighbours: footpaths, farmland, villages, the sea. Avoid the 'turbine against blue sky' cliché unless it is a detail shot. For Millbrook we only show the existing farmland – no photomontages of the solar farm outside the planning documents.

Good: landscape with people, Kestrel Ridge in the distance.

4. Details

Hands, tools, cable ends, bolts, survey equipment – close-ups tell the story of craftsmanship. Use shallow depth of field and keep backgrounds clean.

5. What we do not use

- Staged handshakes and people pointing at nothing
- Stock images of turbines that are not ours – unless clearly illustrative
- Pictures with readable screens, documents, number plates or customer names

- Drone shots without a flight log and permission from the site manager
- Any image showing an unsafe act – report it to HSE instead
